Is it sensible to use substances to enhance psychic abilities?

Salumet confirms that a particular section of the Bible is true where berries were used to enhance psychic abilities. However, he goes on to warn of the dangers of projecting oneself into the etheric realms, when you are not wise to your own abilities. (6/2/95)

George: I would like to ask one question about the last book in the Bible, the 'Book of revelations,' which I believe Saint John wrote, while he was on the Island of Patmos. Chapter 10, verse 10, describes him being given a small roll, which he ate and it was sweet to the taste and bitter to the stomach. He then had visions and he prophesied. I think he was taking a potion/drug to raise his consciousness. Would you be able to comment on that?

Let me speak on that. We have said before, much that has been written within your Christian Bibles, a lot of it was made up, a lot of it in actual fact, comes from older religions, in fact I think you would say, 'Paganism.' There is a lot within your Bible, which has been exaggerated. But let me say this to you: Indeed there was the man you know as John. At the time that we speak of, there were indeed many substances, which today you would find unacceptable. The substance you are speaking about, in those days, was taken from a bush, not here in your country, but a bush that produced berries. This was not an unusual thing to do. Many berries, many powders, many foodstuffs were used, that were considered normal, but which within your age, would be called a drug and would be banned from people using it. Are you following me?

George: Yes, I'm aware that it was an ancient tradition.

Yes, so you see, the substance that was taken by John was not unusual within his peer group. Even now there are peoples on your Earth, who take substances, which they have many explanations for, but what they do is simply raise their consciousness. This is all that happened with John, but the difference with him was that his psychic abilities were much to the fore in any case, as too were all those followers.

George: So his true psychic abilities could be enhanced?

Exactly—the followers of Jesus the Christ were chosen for that very reason. So, by using the substance—the berry crushed, he was enhancing his own psychic abilities.

George: Yes, that's very interesting. I thought it must be something like that and I also felt—That is one of the stories within your Christian Bible, which is indeed fact. Has that been helpful to you?

George: That's been very helpful. It's nice to have that confirmed, because I had wondered about it. There's also the idea that it can be a good thing in certain circumstances, to enhance one's own ability in that way.

I would have to disagree with you there, not because I feel you should not enhance your abilities, but because you can create dangers and I stress the word 'danger,' for those people who are not wise to their own abilities. To thrust forth that spiritual aspect of yourself, without full knowledge and understanding it, can be dangerous. We would have to speak about the etheric realms and what you are releasing that spirit self to. So, you see, that element of danger should not be there. Your psychic opening, your spiritual unfoldment, should be a slow and natural thing. You all have it, you all have the ability to use it to unfold, so I would say to you to refrain from all these methods, that thrust your spirit forward—but of course we come again to your free will.

Les: I would suggest it could be a very dangerous procedure, because the channels to the uninvited would be opened no doubt.

That is why I said we would have to speak more on the etheric realms, because within that realm, there lie many dangers, many dangers that you are not aware of. I don't wish to frighten people, but they should know that to throw their spirit forward without any forethought, is indeed a dangerous thing.

George: Thank you very much.
